Their food should never be thrown on the ground, but be placed on shallow pans or bits of board which may be easily scraped clean. Three meals a day is sufficient, for they will thrive better if compelled to go off between whiles and scratch. I find that I get better results from feeding chicks until one month old upon cooked food entirely. Once only, I gave some little ones raw dough made of corn meal--came home one evening and found no bread in the house. But next morning I was sorry I had not let them go snipeiies to bed, for half of them were dead in their coop and the rest were creeping around crying, with their poor little crops distended almost to bursting, full of hard, sour dough in a state of fermentation. Seeing...
