Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from A Romantic Tale of High American Life It was the intention of the Author, in the origin of this Tale, to have placed it in a certain Literary journal of the day -it being urged by invitation from its Editorial department. But after its completion, ready for the press, it was, by consent of its author, placed in the hands of several eminent individuals, for their perusal of the same; who in return, expressed by letters, their high gratification of the merits and principles by which it originated- urging that it should be placed before the Public in pamphlet form, so that all might read, think, understand. It illustrates the varied sensations that man oftentimes encounters; the garb of fear, the powers of sorrow, and the pangs of affliction- when placed under circumstances, such as will arouse the direful feelings within. This is no fiction. No, it is an every-day fact- it being far from the power of man to control his own fears.
