I believe him would. There was a silence. Now don t ever be afraid to ask me to tend him for you, if you want to go calling or anything, said Miss Primrose. I can just as well come as not. There, he almost smiled! You darling! Oh, I think--I think little babies are the sweetest--don t you remember where the--where the poet-- Miss Primrose smiled a queer, wry, little smile.-- where the poet, she tried again, but turned away. She passed swiftly down the garden path and was gone. Poor Miss Primrose! laughed the whole little world about her. What a beautiful world! sighed Miss Primrose among her petunias. ANY other children but the Pettison twins would have been hopping. The twins never hopped. What hop they ever possessed had long ago been taken out of them by their seriousminded mother who believed that the divine mission of motherhood was to discipline all noise and microbes out of her children. Mrs. Pettison was still too young herself to have much patience with youth, and what she did not know about germs could go into a cherry stone, --and could wobble around in there, too. The twins were surgically clean, both inside and out, not only their tissues and apparel, but also their morals and manners. Hop because of the delightful fact that they were going for the first time to Miss Miller s kindergarten? Not the Pettisons....
