

Rights After Wrongs: Local Knowledge and Human Rights in Zimbabwe (Paperback)

"Rights After Wrongs examines how human rights discourses and the practices they enjoin travel far as migrants move between sovereign states. Exploring discourses of rights, personhood, property, and memory, this book uses the case of Zimbabwe, a country long divided by national borders, to examine the use of discourses of rights and identity in the struggle for a more just and sustainable future for children of rights and justice."

FROM RICE UNIVERSITY'S CAFE NEWS

"The global movement of refugees and migrants is the human rights issue of the twenty-first century. Shannon Morris eloquently documents the movement of people from Zimbabwe to South Africa, drawing out the wider implications for concepts of personhood, rights, property, and memory. Her analysis highlights the difference between economic migrants and political refugees. Morris's analysis of the continuities in the law has a direct bearing on policy developments concerning migration in South Africa and beyond."

The international legal framework of human rights presents itself as universal. But rights do not exist in a mere framework; they are enacted, practiced, and debated in local contexts. Rights After Wrongs explores this tension between the ideal of universal rights and the reality of their application in Zimbabwe. As the colonial legacies of Western law meet the lived experiences, accumulated histories, and humanitarian debates present in post-colonial Zimbabwe, the book reveals how the international legal framework of human rights is locally interpreted, constituted, and contested in Zimbabwean contexts. In the wake of the津巴布韦's political violence and the violent struggles of the past decades, Rights After Wrongs uncovers the disconnect between the ways human rights appear on paper and the ways in which it is enacted in the everyday lives of Zimbabweans.

Shannon Morris is a social anthropologist and Lecturer in the Humanities Education Development Unit at the University of Cape Town.
