Why are we governed by an elite group of politicians when technology exists for self-representation? What if members of a community could attend town hall meetings in the comfort of their own living rooms? What if citizens had the ability to submit proposals directly to their community for a vote? Desktop Democracy explores a fictional time in American history when We the People replace politicians with self-representation through the use of computers and the Internet. Representative government becomes obsolete and unnecessary.or so it seems. A leader of Internet services, Zinic, Inc., sold the American people technology to govern themselves. Zinic s corporate management was focused on Desktop Democracy s huge profit potential. Would it succeed? Some feared voter fraud. Some feared Zinic would gain too much control over government. Others feared violation of civil rights. However controversial, Zinic s plan was simple: plant the seeds of true democracy in small neighborhoods and watch it grow. Revealing what could happen if such a Pandora s box was ever opened, this fascinating work of science fiction by Robert Augugliaro will keep readers intrigued until the very last page. Deeply compelling, it portrays America s forefathers as masterminds, explores how their perception of sovereignty is manifested by true self-government, and examines both the merits and pitfalls of permitting citizens direct access to government s helm. Readers will find the outcome of this tale deeply thought provoking, and left pondering the necessity and perhaps the validity of representative government today.
